Long Island's Hospital Leaders Convene at the Heart of Health Reform

AHA Annual meeting provides opportunity for reform analysis

The massive and comprehensive Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act and its companion legislation the Health Care Education and Affordability Reconciliation Act of 2010, both signed into law just about a month ago, are challenging health policy experts and administrators at all levels, as they work to implement provisions of the bill. The American Hospital Association's annual meeting in Washington, held April 24 – 28, brought senior hospital administrators from this region, led by Nassau-Suffolk Hospital Council representatives, alongside their counterparts from other regions of the country. Together, these leaders acknowledge that the health reform package makes major steps toward bringing health insurance to 92 percent of the population, clamping down on abusive commercial insurer practices, and enhancing affordable market choices for health insurance.

Many view interpretation and implementation of the law's provisions as phase two of the national health care overhaul. For Long Island hospitals that means dealing this year with a projected loss of $2.3 million in Medicare reimbursement between April 1 and September 30, as agreed upon reductions in the annual Medicare inflationary adjustment take hold. Massive cuts to Disproportionate Share Payments (DSH) start in 2014, when coverage expansion begins.

"We've had discussions with members of Senator Schumer's local and Washington-based health care staff," said Kevin Dahill, president/CEO of the Nassau-Suffolk Hospital Council. "We want them, and of course all members of the New York Congressional delegation, to fully understand the impact DSH cuts will have on Long Island hospitals if they are not matched by proportionate increases in the number of newly insured patients.

The readmissions penalty is another area of concern for Long Island hospitals. In 2013, Medicare will stop paying for excessive preventable readmissions. Providers argue that the window to define excessive readmissions is too wide, the policy doesn't adjust for socioeconomic status, and that post-discharge behaviors, such as medication compliance, play a large role in readmissions.

One of the first reform actions taken by the Obama administration was the establishment of an Office of Consumer Information and Insurance Oversight under the Department of Health and Human Services. The new office will address oversight, insurance programs, consumer support, and health insurance exchanges. – Janine Logan, jlogan@nshc.org.

Related Federal Agenda Items

While in Washington DC, hospital administrators met with congressional members and their aides and brought these related items to their attention:

- Extension of FMAP
- Permanent fix for physician Medicare pay cut
- COBRA extension

New York's Budget Struggles Continue

New York is nearing its fifth week without a budget. Essential departments and services are being kept afloat by emergency funding bills. However, in the last week of April, the governor proposed a budget gap closing plan that builds on the budget the executive branch unveiled in January and the subsequent 21-day amendments presented in February.

According to the governor's office, an additional $620 million budget gap has emerged since February, and these additional revenue and reduction actions will close all current budget gaps and put New York on a path to fiscal recovery. One of these actions calls for an additional one-time Medicaid cut of $42 million. This would affect payments to hospitals, nursing homes, home care, and personal care agencies.

While the 2010 – 2011 state budget remains stalled, so do other key legislative items. One of these is the extension and continuation of Transitional Care Unit demonstration sites. – Janine Logan, jlogan@nshc.org.

News Briefs . . .

Local Media Listen Attentively

The Nassa-Suffolk Hospital Council has embraced opportunities to meet with media representatives eager to learn about the new health care reform legislation and other issues related to the delivery of hospital care on Long Island.

In early April, six hospital CEOs and the Nassau-Suffolk Hospital Council's senior leadership met with members of Newsday's editorial board. In addition to discussing reform issues, the board members expressed interest in palliative care and the business interplay between for-profit insurers and not-for-profit hospitals.

In late March, Kevin Dahill, president/CEO of the Hospital Council, appeared as a guest on TV 55's Long Island Focus program. He discussed the impacts of health care reform on Long Island hospitals and the potential changes in insurance and delivery systems that may result.

Tobacco Control Efforts

On behalf of the hospitals in Nassau and Suffolk counties, the Hospital Council has taken an active role in helping each member hospital and the respective counties meet their community health goal of tobacco cessation. The Hospital Council maintains representation on both county tobacco cessation work groups and will be working with them and member hospitals to institute an island-wide public awareness campaign about these collective efforts later this year. Recently, the Council's director of communications, Janine Logan, participated in a tobacco policies panel at Suffolk County's tobacco control and treatment event that marked Suffolk County's 10th year of its Learn to be Tobacco Free program. The event was held at Brookhaven National Laboratory on April 28.

EPA Welcomes Environmental Sustainability

The North Shore/LIJ Health System signed an agreement on April 21, 2010 with the Environmental Protection Agency to voluntarily participate in that agency's environmental sustainability program for hospitals. North Shore is the first hospital system in the metropolitan area to subscribe to the program. Stony Brook University Hospital was the first independent hospital provider to partner with the EPA on this program last year. The Hospital Council's CEO, Kevin Dahill, was influential in bringing the idea of the EPA environmental sustainability program to both hospitals.

Under the EPA agreement, hospitals participate in a scope of environmental programs, including energy and water conservation, solid waste recycling, environmentally sensitive landscaping projects, a commitment to use energy-efficient and environmentally-friendly designs in future new buildings, and other "green" initiatives for healthier communities.

Recent Activities . . .

NSHC Facilitated Enrollment Program . . . will soon begin to offer enrollment services at Stony Brook University Medical Center and Long Beach Medical Center. The Hospital Council also hosted an educational session on April 6 with Nassau hospital staff to address a number of chronic Medicaid application processing issues.

Wage and Salary Surveys . . . are available through the Association of Healthcare Human Resources Administration. Member hospital human resource directors are encouraged to participate in crafting the 2010 survey.

Long Island Regional Planning Board . . . featured the participation of Hospital Council CEO Kevin Dahill at its roundtable on April 6, 2010. He offered his expertise on the role of health care in Long Island's economy.

Health information workforce needs . . . were the focus of a roundtable discussion hosted by the Hospital Council in conjunction with its health IT staffing partner Lloyd Staffing Inc. on April 22, 2010. Hospital and health system chief information officers had the opportunity to tour Lloyd's training facility and review the services available to their institutions.

The Small Business Commerce Association . . . recently named the Nassau-Suffolk Hospital Council for inclusion in the 2009 Best of Business Award in the hospital and health services consultant category.

Emergency Preparedness Activities . . . continue to hold high priority at the Hospital Council and its emergency preparedness coordinator, Linda Wenze PhD, assists hospitals in completion of their grant deliverables. Linda Wenze serves as an outside evaluator for hospitals' alternate triage exercises. Her feedback helps member hospitals complete their grant work and remain better prepared for real disaster events. The Long Island City Emergency Management Conference is being held June 2 and 3. This year there is a hospital/health care track. The link to register is:
